The problem seems to be due to a generic issue that affects all iPhone X models and only for certain users. Affected iPhone users reported that they have this problem, and they cannot find any other causes. Apple is currently investigating the issue. Apple has discovered and is fixing the iPhone Xs, iPhone XR, and iPhone XS Max that have this bug. Other models should not be affected. Even though these phones have the same issue, it appears that the reason why some iPhone X users get this problem is because they have a special kind of case that plugs into the charging port of the phone. Reports have suggested that there is a specific contact within the case that is faulty. The exact problem causing the shutdowns has not been confirmed. Although Apple has yet to release a patch for the bug, users can protect themselves from this problem by switching to a different charging cable. There are also reports that Apple has sent a patch to affected users via SMS. We're still investigating the issue, so we do not have any more details on this bug, but we will update this post when we have more information., the conclusion that the jury's verdict was not a miscarriage of justice is supported by the record as a whole. See Kelley v. Johns-Manville Corp., 726 F.2d at 805-07. This conclusion is supported by the fact that the defendant has failed to demonstrate that it would have had a more favorable result absent the improper testimony. See id. at 806-07. By the time the defendant filed its post-trial motions and memorandum of law, both the plaintiff and its experts had died and the defendant was unable to demonstrate that it could have overcome its own expert testimony. Indeed, the defendant admits that "[e]ven if plaintiff's expert had testified as he did during his live testimony in this trial, it is highly unlikely that the plaintiff would not have prevailed on this 82157476af
